World Population by Country and Region, 1950-90 and Projections to 2050. By Francis Urban and Ray Nightingale. Agriculture and Trade Analysis Division, Economic Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture. Staff Report No. AGES 9306

Abstract

This report contains 1993 estimates of world population by country and region from 1950 to 1990 and projections to 2050. The projections show that world population will expand from 5.3 billion in 1990 to 6.2 billion in the year 2000 and to about 10.7 billion by the year 2050. The aggregate annual population growth rate is expected to decline from nearly 1.8 percent annually in the 1980's to just above 1.6 percent in the 1990's and then to average 1.1 percent between 2000 and 2050. The annual rate of increase for the world is expected to drop to 0.7 percent by 2050. The population data are provided for 222 countries and autonomous geographic units, 14 geographic regions, and the world. The data include population series for each republic of the former countries of Czechoslovakia, Soviet Union, and Yugoslavia. The principal data source is the International Data Base of the Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce. In some cases, country data and Economic Research Service estimates were used.

Keywords: World population, population estimates, projections, population growth rates, countries, regions.

Acknowledgment

We are indebted to the Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce, and particularly to the Systems Analysis and Programming Staff, Center for International Research, for keeping us informed of periodic changes in the world population data and making the series available to ERS.

World Population by Country and Region, 1950-90 and Projections to 2050

Francis Urban
Ray Nightingale

Introduction

This document contains estimates of world population from 1950 to 1990 and projections to the year 2050. The estimates are based mainly on the latest data provided by the Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce. The difference between this report and a similar report published by the Economic Research Service (ERS) in 1990 is that, in addition to updated population series, this report includes population estimates for the newly independent republics of the former Czechoslovakia, Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, and Eritrea. Information on the new republics comes from country sources and ERS estimates.

Population Trends

Tables in this publication indicate that the world population passed 5 billion people in 1986 and stands today, in 1993, at nearly 5.6 billion. It took humanity from its first appearance on earth to about 1790 to reach the first billion, but only 130 years to reach the second billion in the 1920's and 45 years to reach the third billion in 1959. The fourth billion was passed in just 15 years, in 1973, and the fifth billion in 12 years, in 1986. The number is likely to reach 6 billion in 1998 and overtake the 10-billion mark about the year 2040.

The absolute number of people added each year increased from 48 million in the 1950's to over 90 million in 1990, but growth rates are likely to start declining in the next quarter-century. The world population growth rate peaked in 1963, after reaching the alltime high of over 2.2 percent per year, and then began to decline gradually to the current annual rate of 1.7 percent. By 2050, the average world growth rate is estimated to drop to just 0.7 percent per year, indicating that the world population may stabilize at about 10.5-11.0 billion people by the year 2,100 (see table on page 5 and fig. 3, page 7).

While the population growth rate has been declining in most countries and regions, the regional average is just reaching its peak of 3.2 percent per year in Sub-Saharan Africa and is expected to peak at 3.5 percent per year in the Middle East in 1995. However, by the middle of the next century, the population growth rates in these two regions are still likely to be twice as high as in other regions (see charts on page 7).

Population Growth Comparisons

The data in this bulletin represent the most recent population series and projections by the Bureau of the Census (2,3).¹ Such estimates are made for every country in the world based on the latest available information on national populations by age and sex, fertility, mortality, and international migration. The difference between the world population numbers published by ERS in 1990 (6) and those shown in this report is minor, amounting to a decrease of 20.3 million people in 1992, or 0.33 percent of the world's population. This difference is accounted for by upward reevaluations of the population in the People's Republic of China (17.9 million) and in the United States (401,000), and a downward adjustment of Nigeria's population (34.1 million).

The numbers projected for the world to 2050 have increased from 10,656 million in 1990 projections to 10,713 million in the current projections, or by 57 million people. This is due to higher projected numbers in the United States (up 82.8 million) and in China (up 65.7 million), and a lower projected number for Nigeria (down 61.2 million).

Differences between the Bureau of the Census and the United Nations' population numbers and projections are also relatively small. The Bureau of the Census numbers usually are larger than those of the United Nations (1). For the world, the difference between the two series decreased from 1.6 percent in 1950 to 0.1 percent in 1990, but is projected to increase to 2.3 percent by 2025. Thus, the Bureau of the Census projects world population to increase from 5,297 million in 1990 to 8,698 million in 2025, while the United Nations' medium variant shows an increase from 5,292 million in 1990 to 8,504 million in 2025. The relative spread between the two series is much greater for individual countries and regions. The two series differ most for the Middle East, jumping from the modest 1.7 percent difference in 1990 to 15.8 percent by 2025. The difference is also large for South Asia, 9.7 percent in 1990, but it disappears in the projected numbers. Other regions with divergent projected series of up to 4 percent include the Caribbean Islands, Sub-Saharan Africa, and South and Southeast Asia.

Technical Notes

The population numbers in this report are shown as of July 1, except for those for the former Soviet Union and its component republics, which the Soviet sources give as of January 1. The data cover the world, 14 geographic regions, and 222 individual countries or geographic units, including the two republics of the former Czechoslovakia, 15 republics of the former Soviet Union, and six republics of the former Yugoslavia. Aggregate data for these three former states are also given. Although the data span the period 1950-2050, only 1970 to 2000 numbers are shown as annual series and the rest in 5-year intervals because of space limitations. The numbers are given in thousands, without decimals, since for most countries a decimal number would represent a spurious accuracy.

Most international population data originate with national governments, which conduct periodic population censuses, usually every 10 years. For some countries or geographic units, only estimates are available. This information is then combined, with some adjustments, by the Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce, and by the United Nations Statistical Office, into two independent international population data series. These two organizations also provide country-by-country population projections, currently to the year 2050 by the Bureau of the Census, and to 2025 by the United Nations. Some national governments also make population projections for their own use.

Countries and geographic units in this bulletin are generally the same as in the Bureau of the Census statistics. In particular, the People's Republic of China and Taiwan (Republic of China), as well as Greenland and Denmark, were retained as separate units. Similarly, Western Sahara (formerly Spanish Sahara), the West Bank, and Gaza Strip remain separate units. However, the population of Faroe Islands (about 48,000 in 1990) was included in that of Denmark; the population of the Channel Islands (Guernsey and Jersey, 134,000 in 1990) and the Isle of Man (65,000 in 1990) was included in the United Kingdom.

The successive re-issues of the World Population since 1984 (4,5,6) were necessitated by occasionally drastic revisions in the series by the Bureau of the Census and by continuing changes in the political map of the world. The most recent changes include the separation of Mayotte, a French dependency, from the independent state of Comoros (1984), and of Aruba, now an independent state, from the Netherlands Antilles (1985). Also, the U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was gradually dismantled between 1986 and 1988, forming the Northern Marianas, now a U.S. Commonwealth, and the Federated States of Micronesia and Marshall Islands, now both U.S. Freely Associated States. As of this writing, only Palau, a collection of some 200 volcanic islands, with only 8 inhabited, remains a Trust Territory. In 1990, Yemen Arab Republic (North) and the People's Republic of Yemen (South) merged into Yemen Republic. After a prolonged struggle for independence, the people of Eritrea, numbering some 3.3 million today, initiated a formal process of separation from Ethiopia and formed their own state. However, they are shown together in this document as Ethiopia and Eritrea.

Also in 1990, the Berlin wall collapsed and the German Democratic Republic (East Germany) was absorbed by the Federal Republic of Germany. Then, in 1991, the Yugoslav Federation disintegrated when, first Croatia and Slovenia, and then the other republics, except Montenegro, opted for independence. However, some states that have emerged from the current upheaval in the former Yugoslavia are essentially unstable and, when the smoke eventually clears, their borders and populations are likely to be substantially different than the current maps and currently projected numbers show.

Also in 1991, the former Soviet Union dissolved into 15 independent republics. Boundaries of some of these republics are still unstable, including those of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, and Moldova. Even the Russian Federation, with a total population of 149.3 million people in 1993, includes 21 autonomous regions and "republics," with the combined population of about 23 million, some of which have been claiming different degrees of independence from Russia.

Finally, the Czech and Slovak Republic (Czechoslovakia until 1991) split into independent Czech Republic and Slovak Republic as of January 1, 1993. Somalia has been in a state of civil war since January 1991 and subject to famine for nearly as long. It has, de facto, split into the separate states of Somaliland (Hargeisa) in the north, and Somalia (Mogadishu) in the south. Regardless of the political units that may emerge in this corner of Africa, their combined population since 1991 will be somewhat different than the numbers shown in this report.

The Bureau of the Census no longer provides population projections for both East and West Germany; instead it provides population numbers for only the united Germany. Those who still need the numbers for the former two states may want to consult our 1990 population bulletin (6).

Apart from country source information (shown in tables on pages 20, 21, 23, and 24) and ERS estimates, most of the data in this report represent a part of the information in the International Data Base (IDB) machine-readable file maintained by the Bureau of the Census. Other population information in that file includes population distribution by sex; age and age group; urban and rural population; economically active population by age, sex, and industry; life expectancy; school enrollment; and other categories. This information is electronically accessible directly from the Bureau of the Census.

This is the fourth ERS issue of the World Population series. Except for the first issue (May 1984) which was based on ERS estimates, all subsequent issues used the Bureau of the Census information. The data format, coverage, and presentation were dictated by requirements of ERS and USDA analysts.
